FOOD FOR THOUGHT

by Tim Lomas

HEAD CHEESE, what do the words imply? Something you see at the deli but never tried? A condition of a mind compressed and fermenting from inactivity? or simply the #1, the head of the class? Probably the last thing you would expect are three offbeat sirens performing to the rhythm of their own unique songs. But then HEAD CHEESE music is far from anything you'd imagine. Starting with noble artistic intentions and armed modestly with lyre, miked suitcases and other ad-hoc instruments, they began their fight against the ennui and apathy in the Philadelphia scene where they met. Soon the concept of HEAD CHEESE grew into a smorgasbord of sound and stage. A conglomeration of audio and visual images thru the use of films, sets, slides and unusual instruments.

These three females have lured many out of the depths of boredom and onto the dance floor. Now you too can be exposed to HEAD CHEESE. Their first single, Jungle Jam, Teenage Idol and Non-Melodic is produced by David Javelosa, and is available now on Burn Potential Records. Look for it in the refrigerated section of your local record store

NEIGHBORHOOD

'HENNA' was the name of the tune being performed by Head Cheese last Friday in the window of Philadelphia College of Art's Broad and Spruce campus. During the song, the group's lead singer, Susan Ottaviano, gets a henna treatment for her hair.

The band, four PCA students, was put together as part of an independent study project in visual performance at the school. Besides Ottaviano, its members are Jill Sunshine (bass), Celeste Ries (organ), and Jade Lee (drums).
